on a religious foundation, it is ultimately rejected as a means of argument for the spiritual kingship of the Pope. Kent, in his Commentaries, tells us that the "most important result of the naturalization was the compulsion to take out abjuring all foreign alliance and subjection in all matters ecclesiastical as well as civil, and to renounce the right of appeal, to exclude from the benefits of naturalized Roman Catholics who acknowledged the Pope as their spiritual head, and it was the result of fears respecting the religion of the Roman Church which European history had taught us was incompatible with the principles of justice or the good order of civil society."

Ecclesiastical abjuration has long ago been abandoned in the United States, and is not to be used as a basis for discrimination by race or color, and religious liberty uncontrolled by legislation, are now guaranteed to all citizens of the United States by any church, Protestant or Catholic, the emigrant.

[illegible]

"I have nothing to sell, and you can't have an ounce of provisions at my price," replied the Captain.

"Give me a pistol from his belt as quick as thought, and leveling it at the head of the now trembling Captain, he said: 'you are my prisoner; make the least resistance and you shall die like a dog.'"

Turning to his men the pioneer gave a few lusty words of command, and in five minutes every driver was a prisoner. Overboard the soldiers threw their captives, the stands but little resistance, and the train was captured without bloodshed.

"And now," said Kilt Carson, "turning toward the trembling Captain, 'two will attend to your case at once; I learned you was on the road, and had refused to sell a morsel of food to starving men; here are emigrants nearly starved, while you are eating and drinking. If you want, rather to render them any assistance, I will be the disposer of your stores, and see that these men are fed.'"

At this juncture, we came up to the spot where Carson was sitting upon his horse, and asked if he could give us anything to eat. He ordered his men to supply our wants. After giving us nil

We wanted to eat, they loaded us down with much as we were able to carry, and sent us on our way rejoicing.

We afterwards learned that Kit Carson secured the lasting good will of many poor, starving emigrants, whose wants he supplied, and whose lives he saved, by ministering to their necessities from the ample stores of that train. After distributing large shares of the stores in the hands of the poor, he allowed the remainder to be carried to the mouth of the southern river to proceed with provisions amply sufficient to supply his present needs.

Our Nohra-kas were then an untroubled wilderness, inhabited by wild beasts and savage men. It did not take long to reach the Indian country, and here the monotony of daily life was varied by startling incidents which can never be forgotten. We had not journeyed far before we found that we had too much baggage. As an immemorial custom of the country is to travel on foot, we were travelling wretchedly. Red deer, horses soon became scarce, and the poor things found it difficult to make rapid progress. On we pressed day by day. We had not travelled half the distance before we came to dead, even, dying horses, abandoned wagons, and emigrants pursuing their journey on foot and depending upon the uncertainties of the chase for subsistence. There a gun had been fired, and the deer had been killed and devoured. All this with clouds and trees untold horrors from fatigue, exposure and want, how as I approached our journey's end. Our hearts grew light at the golden prospect.

When within a few miles of the mines we were startled by an apparition sitting by the wayside. We passed and carefully examined the endurable looking stranger, whose worn cheeks spoke of much fasting and whose ragged clothes and woe-begone expression assured us that he had lived a long journey, and had handled somewhat roughly. He pronounced a sorry sight.

"Hail, brother," he said, "you look as though you had a few bad days."

mini-training for the starving cow-own load grew frightfully light and starvation began to stare us in the face.

It was barbarous amusement to see what we the Indians made of our deserted property. They would take a cart wheel from an abandoned wagon, set fire to the hub and charred while it was burning. Then they would take the spokes which were needed, they would pick up a gun when some weary traveller had thrown away, and poke the fire with the butt end of it. The powder in the loaded gun would soon take fire, and send the whole charge into the body of the careless sav-

"And so I live." Then he went on to tell me how he left home in command of a long train, loaded with camp supplies, and how he fell in with Kilt Carson who robbed him of nearly all his load, and how, after this, his mules died, his men untied, his train broke up and his men separated, and how he was left alone in the desert. He had nothing left of his splendid outfit, but rags and tatters. Could it be that the pitiful looking object before me was the Captain of that long emigrant train, and that he had been reduced to such a fearful strait as this? yes! this was the age. They soon learned to walk carefully around one of these mysterious instruments of death without touching it. They also learned one of them poked you in the stomach. This was a curiosity, and quite a crowd gathered around to see what the queer thing was for. Suddenly it went off and an Indian fell dead, while the rest ran off, as though pursued by evil spirits.

At last our horses gave out and we were obliged to pursue our journey on foot, leaving the bulk of our stores behind. It was a sorry day for us, as there had been no rain for a week, loaded with ammunition and a few new-saw articles.

THE DECALOGUE.

"THOU SHALT NOT STEAL."

Took nothing from thy neighbor,
Nothing but thine own;
The limit of his hand labor,
Which thine,

We travelled onward. After travelling this way for some distance, we fell in with an emigrant train, consisting of some thirty wagons, loaded with provisions.
 They were from the South. The commandant of this train had evidently spent most of his days in the enjoyment of the luxuries of life, residing excessively in idleness, merely directing the affairs of a plantation. He was of commanding stature, wore a broad brimmed hat, rode a sleek-looking mule, and seemed proud of his position, of the wealth under his charge, and to look down with contempt upon the poor and unfortunate.

Then let him keep
 The good that God has given;
 Freely let him reap
 That which let him have thriven.
 Take not the much-prized treasure,
 Treasure all his own;
 He keeps it for his pleasure,
 Let it be abused.
 Lay not thy hand
 On that which is another's;
 He sold or gave it;
 Take not, nor let thy brothers.
 Take not away the basket,
 Only what is thine;
 Leave him his store and basket.

We made known our destitute circumstances and tried to buy or beg something for present necessity. He cursed us and, in poverty, telling us we had no business out there on the plains in such a de-throne condition that if we had managed right and taken care of what we had, we should not have come to want; that we were worthless and deserved to starve, and a great deal more that we did not care to remember. We saw that it was useless to reason or dispute with a man who had such a known want and whose heart seemed as hard as a mill-stone.

THE ERIE RAILWAY.

The battles of the railway bulls and bears have brought into general notice the great lines of railway extending from New York city to the West, which put the immense company controlling the line known as the Erie Railway chains a large share. Its projected connection with the Hartford and Erie Railway, with which our Legislature has been busily engaged for months, makes this great corporation an object of present interest to New England men, and having recently made a tour of the Erie through the courtesy of Mr. Geo. F. Field, of the Rutland and Burlington Railway, we propose to give a description of the objects of interest along the line, which, in their characteristics of grandeur and beauty are not surpassed by any line in the country, with the exception of the great Pacific Railway, in its way across the Sierra range of mountains.

The construction of the Erie Railway was commenced in 1836, the enterprise receiving State aid to the amount of $3,000,000, and in 1841 the first section of the road, from Piermont to Goshen, about 40 miles, was opened for travel. Amid pecuniary difficulties the work was continued, and in 1851, the entire line of 446 miles, from Piermont to Dunkirk, was open for public use. Since that time the company has continued a perpetual line of the railway from Piermont to New Jersey City, and by the construction of the Bergen Tunnel, and laying a line of rail about two miles in length, the trains are brought to Long Dock, opposite New York. A number of railway lines have since been absorbed by the Erie Company, and with the construction of branches, in every direction, the Erie controls an immense amount of the interior trade of Southern and Western New York. The entire cost of the road, up to the year 1867, is estimated at nearly $50,000,000. The business of the road requires the employment of 37,000 operatives, and over 6000 cars of different kinds.

With this brief statistical review of the great thoroughfare, our readers will be in imagination lost in the elegant ferry boats of the Erie at the Jersey City station, on a fine June morning, and contemplating the employment of 37,000 men, on the West, on the famous lightning train, drawn by a monster locomotive, which stands upon the track awaiting the signal for departure. Gliding out of the depot the traveller is conveyed through the long tunnel, and emerges upon the Jersey marshes, and the first view is a wide extent of reeds and rushes, and awaiting the hand of improvement to develop their untold wealth of agricultural production. Amid picturesque views of rivers, towns and rural neighborhoods, the Hackensack and Passaic rivers are crossed, and the cars arrive at Paterson, N. J., in the limits of which are located the celebrated Passaic Falls, with romantic scenery in the suburbs. The lightning train makes no stay at this point, but swiftly rushes on to Suffern, where the Erie Railway proper commences, and at this point passes through a deep valley new the Orange Mountains, to Tarrytown Station, where the cars enter the hotel, called the Orange Hotel, containing a spacious dining saloon for the use of travellers. Beyond this station, distant seven miles, the Greyhound menards are reached, where the road is built on piles, the meadows being a wide extent of open ground, and the appearance of the road in the contrast between the black soil and the long lines of vegetable production with which the proprietors have covered its surface. Pushing on to Goshen, through a country flowing with milk, (if not honey) being the rich grazing region, where the traveller is brought to Goshen, and the Shawangunk Mountains, and passes along the ridge, after reaching the summit, for several miles. The view from the ridge of the romantic valley of the Neversink, with the dizzy heights along its terrible slopes, the lightning train is brought to Port Jervis, where the Delaware river is reached, and for many miles the road follows the sinuosity of the river along the rugged, precipitous bank, the traveller looking down from the rocky way, into the boisterous torrent of the river, far beneath him. Through this section, the road is built on the solid rock, and in surveying the route, the engineers were lowered from the tops of the precipices with ropes, to enable them to prosecute their work. At the Summit Station, eight miles beyond Deposit, on the dividing ridge between the Delaware and Susquehanna rivers, the traveller is brought to the two stations, 263 feet. A grade of sixty feet to the mile commences here, and carries the train to the Cascade Bridge and a little farther on, the Starcase Viaduct, two beautiful and marvellous specimens of engineering. The rich valley of the Susquehanna is now reached, and at Great Bend, 200 miles from New York city, the Erie forms a junction with the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, which connects with the extensive coal fields of Northern Pennsylvania, and has an immense trade in anthracite. The route of the water-courses, meadows, and its asylum for turkeys, comes in turn, and thence through beautiful pastoral and mountain scenery, the cars roll on to Elkhart, N. Y., a city which has sprung up within the last thirty years, and bids fair to become a large manufacturing city, extending from thence to every part of the State, and South to Baltimore. Seventy-two miles beyond Elmira, at the town of Alfred, the highest point on the line is attained, being 1700 feet above the sea level, and in Cuba Summit, the highest ridge, and left behind, the water falling within the distance of a few rods, both east and west, to the Atlantic on one side and the Mississippi on the other.

LOVELL'S CORNER.

The Union Circle held their annual strawberry festival last Tuesday evening. Owing to the festival in the Town Hall the same evening the attendance was small; those present, however, enjoyed the evening, being entertained by a band of music, and a variety of instrumental music, and abundantly regaled with strawberries and ice cream.

THE WYOMOUTH SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The Weymouth Sabbath School Association held its monthly meeting on Sunday evening last in Rev. Mr. Rockwood's Church at N. Weymouth. An essay was delivered by Mr. Martin Hawes, on the "Conversion of Children." Mr. Hawes thought that there was too little direct, personal effort, on the part of the teachers, to secure the conversion of their pupils. He believed the great end of Sunday School teaching should be to lead the children to Christ.

THE POSITION TAKEN BY THE ASSOCIATION.

The position taken by the Association, which was the subject of the meeting, was that the teachers should be personally conversant with the spiritual condition of every one of his scholars, and try to win them to Jesus. Rev. S. L. Rockwood expressed his interest in the essay, and thought there were two ways of securing the end desired. The first was, to labor, expecting immediate results, and the other, to lay a foundation and gradually expect it to be seen. Both of these he thought were necessary.

THE POSITION TAKEN BY THE ASSOCIATION.

The position taken by the Association, which was the subject of the meeting, was that the teachers should be personally conversant with the spiritual condition of every one of his scholars, and try to win them to Jesus. Rev. S. L. Rockwood expressed his interest in the essay, and thought there were two ways of securing the end desired. The first was, to labor, expecting immediate results, and the other, to lay a foundation and gradually expect it to be seen. Both of these he thought were necessary.

LOVELL'S CORNER.

The Union Circle held their annual strawberry festival last Tuesday evening. Owing to the festival in the Town Hall the same evening the attendance was small; those present, however, enjoyed the evening, being entertained by a band of music, and a variety of instrumental music, and abundantly regaled with strawberries and ice cream.

THE WYOMOUTH SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The Weymouth Sabbath School Association held its monthly meeting on Sunday evening last in Rev. Mr. Rockwood's Church at N. Weymouth. An essay was delivered by Mr. Martin Hawes, on the "Conversion of Children." Mr. Hawes thought that there was too little direct, personal effort, on the part of the teachers, to secure the conversion of their pupils. He believed the great end of Sunday School teaching should be to lead the children to Christ.
